| Age details:  | The Rough Sleeper Accommodation Programme targets the relief of rough sleeping by enabling access to accommodation and support for people who are or have been rough sleepers. It is a capital programme purchasing 1 bedroom flats in Birmingham via a Housing Association, and a revenue programme enabling support to those tenants. The criteria is rough sleepers aged 18+ who are able to sustain accommodation with support, and move away from rough sleeping. The programme builds upon the experience and success of the Housing First programme 2018-21 which has accommodated over 150 individuals who were rough sleepers in Birmingham. Rough sleepers are acknowledged as some of the most excluded of groups with a increased chance of early death, substance misuse, poor physical and mental health, disability, offending behaviour, a history of being in care including as a child, and legal issues relating to status in the country and access to benefits. The age profile of rough sleepers tends to be 5-10% in the age band 16-25, with the majority being 26-39, and a further 10-15% being 40+. The RSAP is open to all ages, and support is in place regardless of age, with specialist services in place for 16-25's.  |

Women account for around 10-20% of rough sleepers found bedded down on the streets of Birmingham, men 80-90%. With this it is recognised that women's homelessness can be more hidden and less likely to present as street sleeping. The RSAP is accessible to both men and women and is a programme committed to identification and provision for both presenting and hidden rough sleeping. The provision seeks to include choice and so secure accommodation outcomes that are suitable according to needs and wishes, regardless of personal characteristics. Linking into the rough sleeper partnership there are specialist services for women seeking to ensure particular needs are addressed, these include outreach, daycentre and emergency accommodation options.

People from black and minority ethnic groups present as sleeping rough at a lower rate than the general population of Birmingham. It is recognised that rough sleeping may be more hidden amongst particular minority groups. Work is done across the homeless partnership to address areas of under-representation and access to services. There is an over-representation of people sleeping rough from EU nation states, especially eastern europeans, where individuals have rights to be in the UK and to work, but without rights to benefits/public funds - this status can exclude from programmes including RSAP if there is no means to pay for rent. Also over represented are failed asylum seekers, from a range of countries, primarily African and Asian, who have the right to remain in the UK but no access to public funds. Such individuals may also be excluded from the RSAP on the basis on it not being sustainable.

Religion or beliefs are not a factor leading to exclusion from RSAP. The RSAP brings into access a wider range and choice of accommodation and support linked to the accommodation.

Protected characteristics: Sexual Orientation

Sexual orientation details:

Recording of sexual orientation amongst rough sleepers is very low and in some part reflective of the crisis in which individuals are presenting. Sexual orientation is not a factor in excluding access to RSAP, a programme that opens additional accommodation and support options for people who sleep rough.

Socio-economic impacts

Overall the programme aims to bring around £2.5m of additional capital investment into Birmingham through the provision of additional social housing units. In addition revenue funding to provide support to in total 40 units of accommodation. This accommodation is then made available to people who are, or have a history of sleeping rough. The capital investment is in place to ensure access for 30 years and the revenue initially till March 2024. People who sleep rough are some of the most socio-economically excluded, the RSAP provides a means to address two factors in that exclusion - access to good, affordable accommodation, and access to support to make that accommodation viable. With those components in place further support to address other factors in exclusion are made available - for example, substance misuse services, physical and mental health services. This foundation then support a process of accessing sustainable include, education, training, employment and other elements that help integration.
